

NANCY WYNNE TALKS OF SEVERAL DEBUTANTE AFFAIRS TONIGHT

Two Theatre Parties Will Occupy the Unwearing Debutantes This Evening—Doctor Posey Will Entertain for His Niece—Other Doings

SARAH PENROSE and Emilie Kennedy will both be separately and individually entertained at the theatre tonight. Miss Christine Riddle will give a party, followed by a supper at the Ritz-Carlton, for Sarah Penrose, who is in the way of being the most entertained of the numerous debutantes this season. There is such a large family connection there, and many of the relatives are well to do, and as Sarah is a favorite with them, many are the pleasures planned for her by them, besides the outside friends. The death of Mrs. Tony Hiddle's sister in Pittsburgh, last week, prevents the party that Mr. and Mrs. Tony were to have given on Thursday night before Lisa Norris' dance. The James Francis Sullivan, however, will give a supper and dance at the Ritz-Carlton for Sarah after the opera, on January 25, and it will be a very smart affair. Elizabeth Downs will share the honors with Sarah that night.

Tonight, also, Dr. Louis Plumer Posey will give a theatre party and supper afterwards for Emilie Kennedy, who is the very attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Kennedy. Emilie made her debut in the late fall; she had intended coming out last season, but a death in the family prevented that. Her sister Agnes, who came out three seasons ago, is engaged to Caspar Townsend. The announcement was made this month. Emilie is very pretty and dances beautifully. I noticed her particularly at the Gambol of the Gods last week, she was in the debutante set with Sarah Penrose, Valentine Mitchell, Sarah Franklin and four or five others. I understand that the Davidson Kennedys will give a dance at the Bellevue-Stratford in honor of Emilie and her cousin, Helen Hausell, on February 14.

With the exception of these theatre parties there won't be very much else on the tapis for today. The reason will be an unusually long one, and it will be a bit of rest in between times, and as we rest we are apt to gossip a bit, you know, and wonder why so and so does this or that, and laugh over the latest performances of the various members of society. I heard a funny story about a widow who recently remarried. This same lady has a small son of about 5 years, who is, I am afraid, spoiled, to say the least, and at the wedding, just when the two were about to pronounce their vows, young son broke away from his nurse's restraining hand and rushed up to his mother saying: "Where is the pink rose you promised me?" In vain she tried to quiet him, and told him he must not interrupt. "That's all right," said he, "but I want the rose." Finally, however, they managed to remove this small person from the room, and the ceremony proceeded. It is just as well, sometimes, to make children learn to be when young. Even though this was a harmless interruption, it was embarrassing, to say the least.

In this day of delightful (?) candor, I was not surprised at a recent debutante function, when, at dinner, one of the young men turned to the vivacious young girl next him, and with brutal frankness remarked: "You're a perfectly adorable person, and I hope you're thoroughly enjoying your little self, but that ridiculous chatter of yours prevents my eating, and I'd rather be fed up with food, thank you." The girl's expression showed that she got infinitely more than she bargained for, but a latent sense of humor came to the rescue, and the remainder of her conversation was tempered with discretion. Of course, there's no excuse for such blatant rudeness, especially since the girl in question is rather more interesting and magnetic than the usual young person, and only recently her engagement to the son of a prominent financier has been announced.

WASHINGTON NEWS. WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—President Wilson's Philadelphia relatives—his sister, Mrs. Howe, and her daughter, Mrs. Cottrhan, not to mention the Josephine Cottrhan—have been very much to the fore in the social recrudescence which has followed the President's marriage. They came down for the wedding, at which little Miss Josephine Cottrhan was the youngest guest, and have been house guests at the White House ever since.

They were, of course, present at the Pan-American reception, and were among the few outside guests at the President's dinner to his Cabinet last week. Mrs. Cottrhan has been a good deal in Washington, visiting her distinguished uncle, ever since his inauguration, and on Wednesday night Washington did not know that she had a voice. Then she substituted for Miss Margaret Wilson, who had promised to sing at a reception of the Home Club, she was unable to keep her engagement, as she was at the time in Jefferson Hospital, in Philadelphia, recovering from an operation for adenoids and removal of her tonsils, which had been performed during the previous afternoon. So Mrs. Cottrhan took her place, and Washington made a discovery.

The Home Club is the very successful social organization made up of employees of the Department of the Interior. It is the only club of the sort in any one of the Government departments, and its very decided success is largely due to the active interest of Secretary and Mrs. Lane. His reception of his music and to which the Lane's always succeed in bringing several lions. Mrs. Cottrhan's fellow-artists the other night were Myron Whitney and Nicholas Longworth. Now, Washington knows that Nicholas Longworth is a violinist of no small ability, but outside of the little coterie of real Longworth intimates very few have had an opportunity of judging how well he plays. Those who do know, say that he is virtually of professional calibre, and had it been necessary could have earned a very comfortable living with his fiddle. As a matter of fact, it is doubtful if he ever faced as big an audience as he had at that reception at the Home Club, and greatly to the amusement of those of his own "crowd" who were there, he had a bad attack of stage fright and shipped several pages of his music and generally got rather mixed up; which, after all, gave the human touch to his performance that brought him into sympathy with his audience.

Washington was glad to welcome back Lieutenant Commander and Mrs. Edward McCauley, Jr., both for their own sakes and in the hope that their being here would bring the Oliviers more into society than they had been for the last two years. Mrs. McCauley, it will be remembered, was Jean Oliver, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Oliver, of Pennsylvania, and her marriage some two years ago to a popular young naval officer of unimpeachable connections in the resident set here was a social event. She went as a bride to Philadelphia, where her husband was stationed, and they have only recently returned.

Philadelphia has an additional and especially distinctive work of art in the fabric glass mosaic picture called "The Dream Garden," which has just been finished in the entrance hall of the Curtis Building. The mosaic is a masterpiece of the art of its kind and the largest, this mosaic, built by Maxfield Parrish and Louis C. Tiffany, is one of the city's prize art exhibits. The Curtis company has received more than 200 invitations to private view between 2 and 5 p. m. each day until Friday. The mosaic is composed of more than 1,000,000 pieces of fused glass set in cement. The effect is most decorative and can be cleaned as simply as a window pane. It is 12 feet high and 9 feet long. The decoration is distinctive, because it represents a scene in the life of the ancient Egyptians used the same process when they used glazed tiles set in cement as mural decorations. The execution and the erecting of the work in the Curtis Building required nearly two years. The mosaic was made by Mr. Tiffany, in his New York studios from a model painted by Mr. Parrish. The translation of the painting required one of Mr. Tiffany's assistants, Joseph Briggs, his assistant, superintended the fusing of each bit of glass. After its completion thousands of art lovers from all parts of the country inspected the picture in New York. It was then taken down, sent to this city, and after four months of labor, reset in its present position.
